Gary Would there be any chance of meeting up with him, if you think that might help? Cheers, Warren.

Dear Warren

Thank you for the quick response.

I have meet with him many times now and he is desperately trying to fathom what happened and what to do.

I am lost as to where to tell this man to go as he is now talking about going overseas to work but as his line of expertise is in a very limited field his "blacklisting" will likely follow him.

He has just undergone a very extensive process in applying for his latest job including a very thorough physiological evaluation and he came through with perfect scores and the only criticism is he tends to do things his way when confronted with management he believes are wrong in their assessment of a situation or job.

He is a family man and appears to be a good and decent person and so appreciative that I have taken time to try and help. He was willing to walk away and not bother me anymore when he first saw the look on face after reading his paperwork.

What do you think I should tell him and what do you think I should do now.

Many Thanks

Gary Kennedy

Gary This certainly is an interesting story.

I've read through the attachment carefully but find one big thing missing.

That is, the writer's own perception of what it is that has happened to him
